

Apple Vault Apps Guide

Current List of Vault Apps for Apple Devices Available on iTunes

The apps we have listed below are some of the most popular ones currently available for Apple devices. We cover many more details in our book Are Your Kids Naked Online. Vault apps have a way of disappearing after they have been reported by the media or when parents, school teachers and other adults catch on, but they don't ever really disappear.

They can change their icon, add new features and reappear as a "new" app presented under a new name. There are new apps popping up that provide way to hide things on your phone.

There are two main types of Vault apps:

Password-Protected Apps: Vault, KeepSafe, and Best Secret Folder are some of the most popular password-protected apps available. While some of these apps serve a good purpose, like providing a password lock on sensitive information, kids mostly use them to hide things from parents. In addition to the password needed to unlock your child's phone, you would also need a password to get open these apps and view their contents. These apps can house videos, photos, notes, contacts and text messages.

Disguised Apps: These are apps that look like one thing, say a calculator or flashlight you put in the right "code" or press the right buttons, you have a secret storage area that no one knows about. They can look as innocent as a calendar, notes or music app. Hide It Pro and Secret Calculator are two of the most common apps in this type.

Many of the apps in both categories offer a way to move files and other apps, like SnapChat, Instagram, etc. under their password-protected umbrella and safe from parent's eyes.

Listed below are two main vault app groupings. The first one contains vault apps that can hide photos, videos, phone calls, text messages, contacts, and pretty much anything. The second list contains apps that are primarily for texting and phone calls. We thought it was just as important for you to know that your kids can be calling and texting secretly as well as hiding photos and videos.

This reference guide includes a screen shot of what the current app icon looks like, the name of the vault app listed on the Apple iTunes store as well as the six main features that parents should know about. For most of these apps, there are other features such as, ring tones, amount of storage, etc., that we did not include. If you would like to know all the detailed features, you can visit the Apple iTunes store. Having the app and developer's name will make it easy to find.

Many of the apps have a star rating as well. The numbers that go along with the stars are only the number of people that have actually rated and/or left feedback about the app, not the number of people who have actually downloaded and used the app. The Google Play (Android) apps have a rounded up number for installs, however, Apple does not offer any type of information on how many people have downloaded any app.

For your benefit, we have also included some of the most common dark web browser icons as well.

Definitions of important features that parents need to know:

Hides Videos and Photos: hides photos and videos.

Hides Texts and Calls: hides text messages and phone calls. Allows contacts to be set as private, so that all phone calls and text messages from those contacts will be hidden. You will not know those friends (or strangers) have called or texted your child.

Hides Apps and Documents: allows other apps and documents to be moved and hidden. Those apps will no longer show up on the screen and depending on the vault app, may be hidden from the general settings area. This includes all social media apps and web browsers, such as the browsers used to surf the dark web.

Allows Private Browsing: lets the user browse the internet and websites privately and leaves no website history. Usually removes search history immediately as well.

Supports “Fake” Password: this feature allows the user to setup a fake password that will open a folder that contains “normal” content, such as pictures of friends. It’s referred to as “Mom” content by kids. They have opened it up and showed you that there is nothing there, but they really only showed you a fake folder. A completely different password opens the secret folder hiding their private stuff.

Supports “Intruder” Selfie: Parents beware! The intruder selfie ranges from taking a picture of anyone who tries to unlock phone and/or apps with wrong password, fingerprint or pattern, to taking your picture and the GPS location of where you were when you tried to open their phone and/or apps and emailing to the phone owner, to doing any combination of the above and blasting an alarm letting you know that you were just caught in the act and busted.

Burner Phone Number: Lets the user have a private phone number they can make phone calls and text messages from that is untraceable.

Private Texts, Private Calls and Disappearing Texts: exactly what they say. They are untraceable and deleted after read. Unlike SnapChat, where you can take a photo of the texts, many of these apps have a feature built in that will not allow the user to activate the camera while reading the text, so there is no way to “screen grab” the message.

Emergency Close: This feature lets the user quickly close the vault app by either turning the phone over, flipping the phone or shaking the phone. Some of these apps will also close the app and then open another “real” app so that if a parent wants to see the phone, it looks like the kid was just listening to music, or some other legitimate app on their phone.
